OBJECTS AND IDEAS HIDDEN IN VAIN

Members of the Medico-Legal Society Witness the Most Mystifying Tricks of Telepathy.

Miss Maud Lancaster, of England, with herself as the medium, gave some illustrations of telepathy or thought transference last night before the Medico-Legal Society, in a room at the Academy of Medicine, No. 17 West Forty-third street.

About seventy-five persons, including medical and scientific men, were present. The experiments were closely watched by all. A special committee for that purpose was appointed, consisting of Dr. H. W. Mitchell, W. C. Andrews, M. Effinger, Dr. M. Travis Gibb, J. B. Leake, Edward Thompson, Albert Bach and Cyrus Heddie, all of this city, and Judge Hardin and Dr. R. J. Nunn, of Savannah. In addition Dr. Clark Bell, the Secretary of the psychological section of the Medico-Legal Society, was on the platform.

Miss Lancaster was introduced by her manager, Harry St. Maur. She is a medium-sized woman, with black hair, olive complexion, dark eyes and clear cut, rather massive features. She wore a white dress with immense red sleeves, but her arms were bare to the elbow.

MISS MAUD LANCASTER.

Miss Lancaster attempted no speech about telepathy or her method of interpreting the thoughts of others, but said as soon as she was introduced: "I will retire from the room. During my absence I will assume one to take a jewel or some small object from another and conceal it. You can call this man the thief. Then appoint some other of your number a policeman. I will come in blindfolded, and if you will all concentrate your thoughts upon the place where the object is concealed I will go there and find it. Then think of the thief and I will find him, and after that in the same manner the policeman who will arrest him."

Miss Lancaster then withdrew. Her manager, Mr. St. Maur, had already left the room, and remained out of it throughout the exhibition. Mr. Thompson, of the committee, took a pin from the hair of a lady and concealed it under the carpet in the corner of the room. Miss Lancaster was then brought in blindfolded. Three members of the committee had remained with her when she was taken out of the room in order to see that by no possible means could she receive information of what was done inside.

At last Miss Lancaster requested again to think of the place where the so-called stolen object was received. Miss Lancaster began to stroke the air with both hands somewhat like a blind person feeling around in the dark. She moved very slowly but gradually toward the corner of the room where the pin lay hidden.

HUNTING FOR THE THIEF.

She was approaching the right spot when she turned back and began to pass her hands over the heads and shoulders of the members of the committee who sat near the stage. Here she hesitated a great deal and spent many minutes walking back and forth and stroking the air with her hands. Several times she uttered impatient little cries as if annoyed and in doubt. The she suddenly turned toward the corner where the pin was hidden.

"I must beg you to concentrate your minds upon the place where the object is concealed. Only a minute will do."

Then she moved again in the right direction, but again hesitated and wandered away more than half an hour was spent in this manner, and she made other requests for the people to concentrate their minds upon the right place. Dr. Mitchell, who was acting as Chairman, seconded the requests.

At last Miss Lancaster went to the right corner of the room and passed her hands over the heads of the committee who sat near the stage. She did not find the pin, and wandered several feet away and searched there. Then she said the pin was hidden somewhere near the corner.

For forty minutes had been already devoted to this experiment and the pin was still hidden. Some one moved that Miss Lancaster now and the thief. Two of the committee went over to get the pin, but it had been hidden to well that it required much searching themselves exactly where the pin was hidden and they hadn't even seen it distinctly enough to know that it was a pin.

Dr. Mitchell suggested that this confusion had prevented concentration of in all these experiments she had been secretly hindered by the committee.

Her search for the murdered person was also somewhat lengthy, but she found her and also the spot where the imaginary wound had been inflicted. But while those of the spectators who were not in the line of the experiment were watching her, she was concentrating her mind on the object of the experiment.

The doctors and scientific men congratulated Miss Lancaster on her success.

"I do not know how it is done," said Dr. Nunn. "All I know is that it has been done for I have seen it."

"I do not pretend to give any explanation," said Dr. Mitchell. "but we have seen what Miss Lancaster can do."
